It was pitch dark up there, and this was the first night we had been outside since the flood. We had been snatched from certain death, naturally judged, and many were then separated from their loved ones, not knowing whether they were living or dead. I have been to funerals many, many times, and each time I have seen a great deal of grief and distress as I saw in the faces of the people. Men and women whom I had known and whom I had loved, some of whom I had not seen for years, were together, not knowing what to do to get ourselves through to the top of the roof, if necessary, and I took my only load of supplies, my pocket knife, and went up. Women were crying, men were pale and weak. Children, God bless them, were so weakened by this experience I cannot tell you how much we thank you and all the people of Elba for your help and your concern that came to our rescue. I would tell you about the administrations of money by the Red Cross, and about the generous and gracious response of the public all over the country, but I do not think this letter is the place for that. What all the hearts who would have to eling to the roof top and to the chimney top above. We could hear the ceiling fall, the ceiling gave way. Out there were men who risked their lives on the boats to rescue us. With all our heart of hearts we were grateful to the Red Cross and to Elba and other towns affected who were fortunate in having the new and come to this section who suffered with us.

You will pardon me, Governor, for this length letter, but I do not tell you all how much we thank you.

CLARA BARTON AND THE AMERICAN RED CROSS

Elba Barton was born at Oxford, New York, State, and began teaching at a very early age. She was the first teacher in New Jersey, the town where she was born.

When Miss Barton was 24 years old, she was appointed to the New York Department of Education.

In the Civil War, Elba Barton, then 16, was a nurse in the hospital at New York.

In the hope of regaining health, Elba Barton went to Switzerland but returned to New York.

The war broke out between France and Germany, and Elba was asked to help the wounded.

In her spare time, she was decorated with iron cross by the German Emperor.

Elba Barton, in Europe, Miss Barton became interested in the Red Cross Society, an organization of physicians, farmers, bond dealers and other claimants.

It was largely the Red Cross Society that formed in America, and it became an international organization.

The Red Cross Office is located at Washington, D. C.

Elba Barton has always found something to do.

In our recent disaster, this wonderful organization came to our rescue with acts of kindness and generosity that it is really a friend in need. We send our thanks to our Heavenly Father for directing the Red Cross workers to help us in our great distress. May God bless the Red Cross organization and my many noble workers.

A MAN TO A MULE

Over the hill trudged a man behind a mule drawing a plow. The cobbler was a mule, the son of a jacks, and I'm a man made in the image of God. You know, I've run over the hill, over and over again, and I often wonder if you work for me or for yourself. It's a hard partnership between a mule and a fool. For surely I work harder than you do, and I work longer, and I work further, but you do it on four legs and I on two. So mathematically speaking, I do twice as much work as you do.

"Son, we'll be preparing for a corn crop, and I'm going to work hard, and I'll earn one third to the land for being kind enough to let me use this corn crop. I'm God's man, and I'm a mule to you and what is left is my share. But while you consider me a mule, the son of a jacks, to rob a mule of his share is simply iniquity. And come to think of it, you only have to cultivate the ground for me to do the work and I'll do it while you look over the pasture for me. And when the winter comes, I'll be the last to leave, the whole family, from granny down to the baby, pick cotton to help raise the rent. I'll be the last to leave, and the last to come back, and the last to get any more out of politics than you do. I can't see where it is."—Wise, wise Farmer.

SPRING

Look all we can behold.

The spring sun eddies like gold.

In every little nook and bower.

You will find a bright spring flower,

A flower here and a flower there.

A bird singing in the air.

Gone is the winter.

Because it is spring.

Trees, flowers, wheat and grain.

Have started life over again.

The people have no more sorrow,

For every day we see the bright tomorrow.

THE ELBA CATASTROPHE

It had been raining long and long;

Then it stopped, and it was a wonderful song;

The water was about the people's feet,

Flowing down every street.

The water was in every house,

Drowning many a poor little mouse.

There were many wailing screams,

While people in boats sat on beams.

There was water here and water

And a splash of it everywhere.

The boats then came riding in,

And out went women, children and men,
